This historic book may have numerous typos and missing text. Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1891 Excerpt: ...his father a Bohemian, his mother a German. Of himself he says: ' I was quite a zealot for the Roman Church, superstitious was I, that if an old woman crossed me in the early morning, or a hare ran across the path, I deemed myself unlucky. Great indeed was the darkness which lay upon me till it pleased God in His mercy to direct me, poor, blind, and miserable, into the right way.' Finding little sympathy among Lutherans of the National Church, and being unsafe from the Jesuits, after various wanderings he went to Gorlitz, where he was much strengthened by intercourse with "Rev. Mr. Schafer and other children of God." He now "felt stirred" to visit his native land, which he did twice, preaching "repentance and faith in the Lord Jesus.' Persecution followed, and the Brethren solicited him to find some place for them where they miirht dwell. Returning to Gorlitz, he for the fiiM time met Count Zinzendorf, who on hearing hi statement said to him: " If you will come to me, I will give you a place to dwell in; money I have not. for I too have hitherto been an exile. With what I had I have purchased an estate, and if it is airreeable, you may come in God's name and settle there. If you are seeking God, I shall be glad to receive you." Of this Zinzendorf writes: "Christian David was so intent on the Moravian emigration, that, when engaged in wainscoting the saloon of my house at Berthelsdorf in 1723, and had about finished his work, he left hi tools, and set off, without hat, a journey of nearly '-:i miles, to Moravia, to lead back emigrants. He made eleven or twelve1 journeys in all. and though often in the most imminent danger from the officers of justice who rode in search of him, he was passed by or preserved from th...
