The Best of 'Taking the Long Way Home': Memoirs of Thirty-Something Flashpackers Dan Grady

The 15 months we spent traveling the world were some of the best moments of our lives. We will never forget them nor regret leaving our old lives behind. It renewed our spirits and gave us new perspectives on life. This book is a testament that we do not have to run the proverbial rat race. We can get off that treadmill and pursue our hearts passions. Life and the world will not crumble around us, but rather it will come alive. World travel is not just for the super rich, but in the reach of anyone with the desire and the will. Our adventure is proof that you do not need to spend a small fortune to experience all the world has to offer. The authors hope the compilation of stories from the road will give others the inspiration to reach for their dreams and shuck off the shackles of societal norms.
