What happens when an author tries to synthesize the rules set out in nine different English usage books ranging from newspaper rules to university styles? Something has to give, and in this case it was a reversion to a younger age when impossible situations were wrapped in laughter, sandwiched between wit and humor and ingested in a frivolous atmosphere of sheer abandonment of adult realities. Join the fun-filled activities of the antique lead-type characters of the ancient newspaper in Bookville, where the residents of the typesetter's tray come to life every night when the printer and his wife close up shop.
