Sharon, drowning in the debt of her deceased parents, is coming to the end of her rope. Even the debt consolidation company she was trying to work with was asking for too much each month. With few options left, she is considering going bankrupt. In times like this, she always turned to the one person she could rely on – her muscular, handsome best friend Clint.

While at lunch, Sharon explains her situation to Clint, but he has a surprise of his own: in order for his grandfather to sign over the ranch to him, the old man demands Clint gets married. What began as a joke turns into the solution to both their problems.

When a friendship quickly transitions into something much more, are they able to fight the urge to stray from their arrangement? Or will they risk it all for something that could be so special?!
